

Virginia's New Car Seat Law: What You Need to Know

LAW: This spring, Virginia's legislature passed a new, stronger law on child passenger safety. It makes Virginia children safer by requiring them to remain rear-facing in their car seats until they reach age 2 or the maximum weight or height limit called for by the car seat manufacturer. All children in a car seat must ride in the rear seat, unless the vehicle does not have one. This law goes into effect on July 1, 2019, but you can make it the law in your car TODAY.

FINE: The fine for a first offense is $50, and a subsequent offence can bring a fine of up to $500.

WHEN: Virginia's new car seat law goes into effect July 1, 2019. Keep your small child safer in a rear-facing position and your older children in forward facing car seats or booster seats. You can make it the law in your car today.

WHY: The law is based on current recommendations from the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP). Infants and toddlers are "head heavy," and the rear-facing car seat does a better job of supporting the developing head, neck and spine of smaller children in the event of a crash.

OLDER KIDS: The new law requires all children in any type of car seat must ride in the vehicle's rear seat. All children under age 8 must still ride in an appropriate car seat or booster seat. Children 8-17 must wear an adult seat belt.
